Spotlight on Sveta Zlatareva

My family has always been interested in politics. We used to discuss domestic and foreign politics almost every day after watching the international evening news back in my home country of Bulgaria. To me, that was a fascinating field, and I took a great interest in it. Even as a teenager, I knew that I wanted to become a diplomat or at least land a job in the Ministry of External Affairs in Bulgaria. After my second cousin got a job as an international economic advisor to the minister of external affairs, I was encouraged to pursue my dreams as well. I did not actively attempt this until I attended Sofia University to study English and International Relations. After coming to the United States, I was presented with the opportunity to come to Northwest College, which I gladly accepted.

Once here, I was really pleased with the interdisciplinary approach of study that my major offered. The combination of Political Science and History is very effective because politics is closely related to history, and I cannot understand one without the other. Additionally, with the help of my political science professor, Dr. John Ridge, I was able to secure an internship at the French Consulate in Seattle and enter the field of diplomatic relations. The French Consulate is an extension of the French government in the U.S. to assist French citizens with any problems they might encounter. The consulate is also responsible for providing information about official French governmental policies on many different issues. Working at the consulate has given me an opportunity to meet people in diplomatic careers and get a better understanding of what it takes to pursue work in that field.

I believe that after attending NC, I will be well prepared to face the competition and be accepted into a number of different universities for further studies in political science and international relations. Current U.S. Secretary of State Madeline Albright is an inspiration to me. I would like to model after her and take an active part in shaping policies in the world today. One day my generation will be shaping the policies of the world. I want to be part of that future. I believe my education gives me the opportunity to achieve just that: to do what I am passionate about. People ask me why I am at NC when it does not offer a political science major. I answer saying that the attention and support I get from the teachers in my department far exceeds what I would get at a state college. My curiosity about the world is being continually challenged. And, with the strictly academic knowledge my teachers help me pursue, I am learning how to reconcile my beliefs as I follow the desires of my heart.

Interesting facts about Sveta:

Sveta Zlatareva was born in Pleven, Bulgaria, but her family now lives in Sofia, Bulgaria.

She speaks fluent Bulgarian, Russian, and English.

Sveta arrived in the United States two years ago and first lived in Nashville, TN, where she participated in a Cultural Exchange Program through Sofia University in Bulgaria.

Next she lived for three months with her stateside pastor and his family in Poulsbo, WA; it was from this family that she first heard of Northwest College.

She began NC in the '97 spring semester and will graduate in May, 2000, majoring in Interdisciplinary Studies with a concentration in Political Science and History.

Meanwhile she's enjoying being on the NC debate team and serving an internship with the French Consulate in Seattle.

Sveta with her mother at the airport before leaving Bulgaria for the United States.

Sveta sums up her dreams and goals as follows: "Eastern Europe's struggle to rebuild has given me a particular interest in economic research. My future goal is to help build a bridge between Western culture and Eastern European culture."

Building The Church in Turkey

Did you know that NC is helping to build the Church in Turkey? One of our professors, Dr. Forrest Inslee, has traveled to that country on a regular basis for seven years to teach basic Bible and theology, and train young leaders for practical ministry in their churches. As part-time faculty at the Turkish Bible Institute, located in the international district of Istanbul, he also maintains mentoring and discipleship relationships with young men in the main Protestant church in that city. In a short interview, Dr. Inslee answered a few of our questions about his call to Turkey and his experiences there:

IMPRINT: Dr. Inslee, what motivates you to go to Turkey each year?

The Church is being reborn in Asia Minor, and I am thrilled and amazed to see it! God is moving to restore his people to places like Ephesus and Antioch—cities located in the region we know today as the Republic of Turkey. All over that nation, new, tiny fellowships of believers are emerging, and the name of Jesus is being spoken—albeit in a whisper!—in the streets again.

IMPRINT: What can you tell us about your last trip?

Most recently, I spent two months in Istanbul this past summer, both teaching and doing language study. It was an intense two months. Not only were my teachers strict with me, but I also was called upon to mediate a church conflict which required some cross-cultural theologizing.

IMPRINT: Cross-cultural theologizing?

I am particularly challenged when applying my familiar methods and theological principles in the unfamiliar context that is Turkey. I am frequently faced with the task of re-interpreting ideas that I once thought were clear to me. There is nothing like the crucible of cross-cultural application to expose the dross of what is really just western ideology. On this trip, for instance, I taught about authority in the church—how much influence leaders should wield, who should submit to whom, and the like. The Turks, whose culture is very authority-centered and dependent on the dominant voices of such authority figures as parents and government, have a unique (and to me, rather startling) perspective on what authority in the church ought to look like. Coming from my American, individualistic, independent context, I really had to grapple with what was biblical and what was cultural before I tried to speak into the leadership issues of the Turkish church. It was a challenge that changed me, and I think the Turks as well. God definitely brought new vision out of the dialogue between two fundamentally different perspectives.

IMPRINT: What would you say to the critics who insist that the role of the Western missionary is becoming less important?

Well, I think that's true. Yet despite the fact that there are other Westerners like me helping to equip new believers to spread the gospel in Turkey, the indigenous Christians there are nonetheless committed to developing a distinctively Turkish community witness. The Holy Spirit is leading these "young Turks" to build churches that look, sound, and feel Turkish—to speak words of healing that specifically address the brokenness of Turkish culture—and to present the gospel in ways that are compelling to a uniquely Turkish style and sensibility. As a result, the church is at last being restored in the land where it was born.

Pray that it will be so.

I exhale the me that is there;
I die to myself
As I learn to let go -
To let go of the complexity that is me.

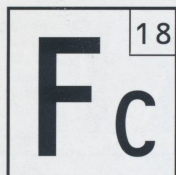

Knowing that this is necessary
Does not alter the fact,
The fact that I am losing
Me.
Parts of me begin to pass
Through my mouth.
Some things I remember
Tasting sweet, things I remember
Tasting rich,
Are now bile from my
Deepest places:
Guilt, Shame, Sensuality are all
Expelled, leaving a horrid
Stench in my nostrils.

Fear is the last to go;
It always is.
I can feel it holding
Onto my innermost parts,
Not wanting to give up its home.
It raises questions,
Raises questions that
I cannot answer:
"What if I stay dead?"
"What if He won't take me
Once I'm empty?"
But -
I am reminded of promises that
Are eternal, unconditional.
With all that is Left of me, I force fear
Out.
I have died to self.

I inhale.
Immediately, a sweet aroma
Fills my nostrils, my mouth.
It permeates through my Entire being.
What fills me now is
More than I could have Thought possible.
It is new, it is better, it is real.
Promises made at the inception
Of time now flood my mind -
My mind which has been washed -
My mind which has been renewed.
My mind. My life. My God.
Thank you.

PRESIDENTIAL

The inauguration ceremonies of Dr. Don Argue as fifth president of Northwest College took place on Friday, September 25th, at the Northwest College Pavilion. The keynote speaker was Dr. Jack Hayford, senior pastor at Church on the Way and president/founder of King's Seminary School of Theology in Van Nuys, CA. More than 1000 attended the ceremonies. Besides the inaugural ceremony, activities included events such as the regional pastor's coffee/seminar with guest speaker Jack Hayford, a guest reception honoring Don and Pat Argue, an alumni and friends banquet, and a beautiful cruise on Lake Washington. The following remarks reveal Dr. Argue's vision for N.C. as he addressed the audience at the inauguration ceremony. ☺

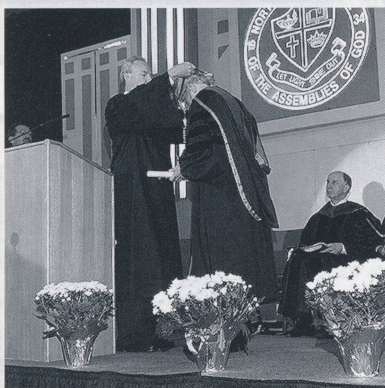

INAUGURATION ADDRESS BY PRESIDENT DON ARGUE

We are heirs of the past! We are guardians of the present! We are architects of the future!

Today we are heirs of a wonderful college. Northwest College was started at the midpoint of the great depression. To even think of establishing a college in such impossible economic times was, to some, foolish.

With a five hundred dollar loan and great faith, Northwest College was started in 1934.

Since that humble beginning to this day, thousands have been trained and have made a difference throughout the world. Pastors, missionaries, and lay men and women have impacted their world for Christ.

To paraphrase Edward John Carnel, the glory of Northwest College is not to be found or measured by observable externals such as the campus and buildings, the size of the endowment, the enrollment or reputation of the faculty. Glory is not an external to be observed and counted. It belongs to the soul of the college. The first evidence of Northwest College's glory rests with spiritual conviction and firmness of moral purpose that the College strives to preserve and propagate. I am referring to the theological distinctives that brought the College into existence.

As President, I vow to propagate and defend the theological and biblical glory of the founders of the college.

We are heirs of the past.

We are guardians of the present.

We are architects of the future.

The cornerstone of the national archives building in Washington, D.C. reads, "The past is prologue for the future." I paraphrase those words, "The past is the introduction to the future."

What we are doing now in the present provides the blueprint for the future. The College has changed from an institute to a strong college. We have not left our original purpose for being; rather we have enhanced and broadened in a planned, thought-through effort to be more effective.

Claude Shannon, the mathematician who in the 1930's recognized how to express information in binary form, founded a field that became known as information theory. Shannon defined information as the reduction of uncertainty.

Reduction of uncertainty.

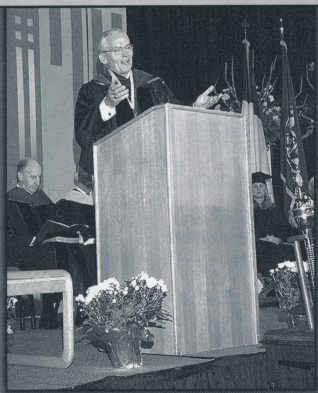

The Psalmist asked in the 113th Psalm, "When the foundations are being destroyed, what can the righteous do?"

With the advance of Post-Modernism, the destruction of the foundations in western culture is real. There is a blunt reality to the shift that is taking place. The moral construct that we knew is basically gone. There exists a great sense of uncertainty.

INAUGURATION

SEPTEMBER 25, 1998

Northwest College, founded on the absolutes of holy scripture, provides the ideal setting for the reduction of uncertainty.

United States Senator John Ashcroft stated, "The greatest responsibility of our generation is to pass on our values and commitments to the next generation."

God has given to the College gifts in the people who are faculty. These friends are highly trained, spiritually committed to Christ, and dedicated to preserving and enhancing the founding values and principles of the college.

Faculty, we express our thanks for your outstanding scholarship, leadership, and spiritual commitment.

Faculty, you are scholars committed to the reduction of uncertainty!

We are heirs of the past.

We are guardians of the present.

We are architects of the future.

With friends like you and God's help, the future of Northwest College is strong. This college is unique, not by accident but by thoughtful design. The graduates of this college are needed today more than any other time in the College's 64 years of existence. Graduates who are academically sharp, thoroughly established spiritually, and committed to service are in great demand.

This college may produce a graduate who discovers a cure for cancer or AIDS, or a graduate who becomes the next Billy Graham. The College will graduate thousands who will touch people and make the world a better place.

We have work to do! Our five-year plan is in progress. Majors will be added and buildings will be built. There are people here who could provide the funds for a new pavilion or the science center we so desperately need.

The world has become a global village. Through our Pacific Rim and Applied Science Centers the realities of globalization are part of what we do at Northwest College.

We live in the information age. With our link to current computer technology, graduates will be equipped to interact and produce in a technologically advancing world.

The role of women in our sponsoring church has been established since the beginning of the denomination. I am committed to gender sensitivity.

My prayer is that my life will reflect the John the Baptist Principle.

"I decrease so that He may increase!"

I am installed as the fifth president of the college. Those who will participate in the prayer and laying on of hands represent the four previous presidents. Ness, Butterfield, Hurst, and Davis. These friends were selected to supply visible evidence that we are:

Heirs of the past.

Guardians of the present.

Architects of the future.

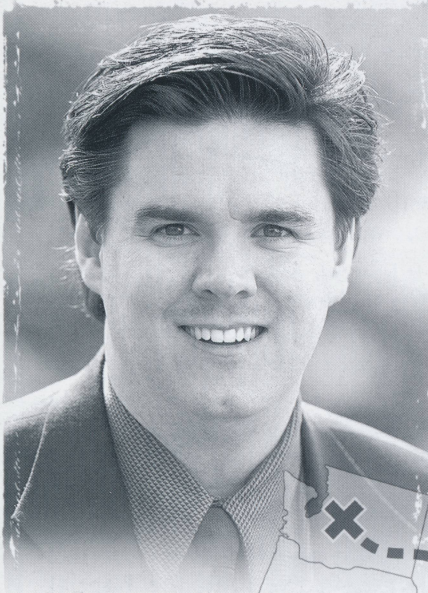

Don Argue, Ed.D

The evening event provided a time for friends and alumni to renew friendships with former classmates, meet President Don Argue and his family and to enjoy a program honoring NC's heritage and God's faithfulness. The program featured a reunion of the Harvester's quartet who sang together as students in the late fifties. Quartet members included Eugene Ness, Al Baunsgard, Rollin Carlson and Ken Lindgren. Several students who have received scholarships for this academic year were present at the banquet. Two of them, Zach Lucas and Therese McHenry had opportunity to express their stories and appreciation. Awards were presented as noted on this page. Mrs. Pat Argue introduced the members of the Argue family and sang a beautiful rendition of Psalm 139. Dr. Don Argue's address theme "We are HEIRS of the past, GUARDIANS of the present, ARCHITECTS of the future" encouraged Northwest College alumni and friends that "With God's help and with people like you, the future of this college is great!"

Featuring Dr. Eugene Ness · Class of '58

Northwest College has been a part of my life from the day of my birth through graduation in 1958. Now after forty years of ministry, I thank God for my rich heritage of family and friends. My father, Dr. Henry H. Ness, founded Northwest Bible Institute before I was born, and to this day, wherever I travel in the United States and many foreign countries, people come to me and say, "I remember baby-sitting you when I was attending NBI." These were students who helped out my mother with her six children.

The friendship and family links to Northwest College are amazing! When my father resigned as president of NBI and pastor of Calvary Temple in Seattle, my new pastor was Rev. Watson Argue Sr., so I became good friends with the pastor's sons, including Dr. Don Argue, (NC's current president) through our junior high and high school days. The president following my father, Dr. C.E.

Butterfield, is the father of our close friend, fellow student, and now missionary partner in Seoul, Korea, Dr. Charles Butterfield. While attending Northwest College, I met Georgine Davis, daughter of the late Rev. George Davis, former pastor and Assistant Superintendent of the Oregon District. We were married in 1958. How was I to know that later her brother, Rev. Dennis Davis, would succeed Dr. D.V. Hurst as president of Northwest College.

God impacted my life in a great way when at age twelve I was filled with the Holy Spirit at a youth camp in Silver Lake, Washington. However, I wasn't positive of God's calling for the ministry until I reached the crisis time of deciding which college to attend. My father never pushed me in any direction but encouraged me to seek God's will for my life. As he was driving me to the University of Washington, to apply and major in Business, we came to a crossroads where it was either to go to the University or to Northwest College. At that moment, I turned to my father and said, "Go to Northwest College." God's calling was on my life and at that moment I surrendered to it.

My years at NC were very enriching, as I learned so much from the studies and the godly professors. Dr. Donald Fee stands out in my mind as he would share the teaching on the Gospels, and tears would come from his eyes as he taught about our Lord.

Even more than the studies, the practical experience of gospel teams was a great influence on my life. I sang in the Harvesters Quartet with Al Baunsgard, Rollin Carlson, and Ken Lindgren. We would take turns preaching on weekends and also all summer as we represented the school in travel through Oregon, Washington, Montana, and Idaho. We relied on our prayer times together to receive a fresh anointing on our feeble efforts at preaching. The people were so receptive and we were thrilled to see hearts and lives touched as we ministered both in word and song.

The speakers during Spiritual Emphasis Weeks were powerful in our lives and helped us to keep focused on the Lord. God has fulfilled my dreams and goals of ministering for Him. Georgine and I have labored together these past 40 years, pastoring churches in California and Oregon before going into full time missionary work overseas in 1982. We have ministered in crusades throughout all of Asia and have had the thrill of seeing thousands accept Christ and many believers filled with the Holy Spirit. We have witnessed miraculous healings as people reach out in faith.

Our son, Brant, went to be with our Lord at age thirty-three. Our daughter, Tami, was recently married and is establishing a Christian home. We are now pastoring the International Christian Assembly in Seoul, Korea, which is a multiracial congregation. Periodically throughout the year we go to other countries to do crusades.

We urge current Northwest College students to seek the Lord and follow His instructions carefully, as they totally commit their lives to the service of the Master.
