THE CAMPUS SCENE TODAY: *What Is Our Status On Accreditation?

'Getting accredited' is often mentioned when people talk about future improvements at NC. Are we not accredited already? The Bible College program has been accredited for many years by the Accrediting Association of Bible Colleges. It is only the Junior College division, then, for which accreditation is still desired.

Is JC accreditation being sought? Yes. College officials have been in contact with the Northwest Association of Secondary and Higher Schools for five or six years, and have attended Association meetings regularly during that time. Two Association officials have been guests on campus.

What steps are there in gaining JC Accreditation? First, the college submits a formal application and a preliminary report. Then an accrediting association representative visits the college. If his report and the college's preliminary report are favorable, the college performs a more thorough self-evaluation study, which is followed by a visit from an accreditation team. When all this is successfully completed, the Higher Commission of the Northwest Association takes official action to accredit during its annual meeting.

At what point in this procedure is NC? The preliminary report has just been submitted; the representative's visit has not yet taken place. The self-study may be done in the coming school year.

When might JC accreditation come? The earliest date would be December 1967, one and one-half years from now.

What changes have been made in the college in preparation for seeking regional accreditation? Several. First, there has been improvement of physical facilities, especially along the lines of gymnasium, science labs, and library.

Then, new courses have been added, such as those in mathematics, science, and business. Also, more teachers have been employed, with more stress on each one teaching in his major field.

ALUMNI PRESIDENT'S COLUMN

"I am sorry, mother, but I flunked out". Most parents and students know what the word "flunked" means. We didn't quite make the grade. We came short. It means that our efforts may not have been channeled exactly to fit the pattern of success.

Today parents as such are 'flunking out'. Businesses are doing the same. Occasionally we Alumni Members do the same in our relationship to our Alma Mater.

But to 'flunk out' as a Christian is really unnecessary when we have the resources of Heaven directed to us and available at all times. In churches the fellowship should seek to remind us that we are 'our brother's keeper' and this should be a deterrent to 'flunking out'. Many 'back-sliders' are 'drop-outs' because in the area of Brotherly Love we have not practiced our lessons. Churches today in most communities would be full if all 'who once named' His name were walking down 'victory lane'.

In this day of pressure, we make an appeal to all of our Alumni family, may God help us not to 'flunk out.' It may be the last mile of the race!

--Eugene A. Born,
President.

2ND LAY COUNCIL MEETS

The Northwest College Lay Council which had its second annual meet on the campus May 12 and 13, came up with some noteworthy achievements.

The Council was organized into specialized study committees and spent the major part of its time in study. It voted to take on a project of raising funds for the new pews in the college chapel and was successful in raising $3,000. It also elected a new regional vice-president for Montana in the person of Mr. John Johnston of Helena.

The Women's Auxiliary of the Lay Council held its meetings concurrently with those of the Council itself. The women elected officers as follows: President, Mrs. Don Skidmore of Yakima; Vice-president, Mrs. Ileta Johnson of Bellevue; Secretary, Mrs. David Olson of Seattle; and Treasurer, Mrs. Thomas Williamson of Milwaukie, Oregon. The Auxiliary adopted a constitution and took on a project of purchasing a typewriter for the new business department to open at the college next fall.
