

"Here is an old man in a prison cell. His name is Paul. He is writing a letter. As he writes a breeze comes in through the window and fans the thin hair about his temples. A shiver goes through his body, but he writes on. Again the chill wind blows upon him, but stronger this time; so he lays down his pen and fumbles behind himself in search of something. "Oh, yes," he says to himself with a whimsical smile, "I remember now. I forgot my old cloak and left it at Troas with Carpus. How silly of me!"

"Then he resumes his letter. "Dear Timothy," he writes, "I wish when you come you would bring my cloak with you. I left it at the house of Carpus. Come before winter if you can, for it is already getting cold, and I see that I am going to be exceedingly uncomfortable without my cloak. But" he adds, "if you find that you have too much baggage, if you are too heavily loaded to bring the cloak ~~bring~~ the books, especially the parchments. I can afford to be uncomfortable. I can afford to have a shivering body and aching bones, if necessary. But I simply cannot get on without my books." - Clovis G. Chappell
