My aunt, a social worker for the government, was required to have recipients of welfare fill out many blanks, slips, and other report forms.

A lady came one day without the necessary identification form, and my aunt instructed her: "You'll have to come back tomorrow and bring your pink slip."

She stared in surprise the next day as the woman handed her a package with a pink rayon slip and commented cheerfully: "I said to Frank this morning, 'It's a good thing I have a pink one!'"
